Below the question, it says "posted in Family and relationships | 1 response" and "Flag as objectionable". The "Responses:" section is titled "Good Lawyer Guide's response" and contains two paragraphs of text. The first paragraph explains that if an agreement cannot be reached, a court will make a decision based on important issues like children, duration of marriage, financial resources, and standard of living. The second paragraph states that it is common for a judge to order that the parent with custody of the child (usually the mother) will get to keep the house, and other assets may be split equally or divided into unequal shares. It concludes by advising the user to draw up a list of assets and their contributions over the years to work out a fair split.
